

Farmers Bank Hold-Up Solved; Capture Fourth Man.

FUGITIVE CONVICT NOW UNDER ARREST IN INDIANAPOLIS

Seibert, Who Escaped From
Trenton Jail, October
23rd, is Caught

ADMITS HIS GUILT

Was Ready to Break Into A Restaurant in Indiana
City

Frank Seibert, 24, one of the four convicts who escaped from the New Jersey State Prison at Trenton, N. J., October 23rd, in a break which resulted in the deaths of two of the fugitives and a policeman, has been arrested in Indianapolis and confessed to his part in the break, according to police of that city.

Seibert was arrested in Indianapolis on November 11th for attempting to break into a restaurant.

Seibert told officers that a man he knew only as Stoddard, who also escaped in the prison break, came to Indianapolis with him. When officers found Seibert crouching behind a box near the restaurant, he admitted, they said, that Stoddard had gone for a bar to force the lock. The latter never returned.

After escaping from the prison, Seibert told officers, he and Stoddard stole an automobile, abandoned it nine miles from the prison and then boarded a train. Seibert said he was sentenced to the prison for a 15-year term for robbery from Newark, N. J., February 7, 1930.

The escape of Seibert and Joseph Stoddard, Jack Wierman and James A. McGrath from the State Prison on the afternoon of October 23, was one of the most daring and sensational escapes ever made from the New Jersey State Prison.

Wierman was employed in the cook house and the other three men were working in the shoe shop when, by prearranged plans, they walked into the yard on the second street side. An electrician had a ladder propped up against the 22-foot wall while working on the alarm system and the four convicts scaled it. Two of the prisoners, who carried revolvers, began firing at John D. White, one of the tower guards.

After wounding White the men went into his tower and stole his revolver and riot gun. They dropped to the ground on second street while other towermen fired at them and dashed through an alley to Centre street.

Wierman and McGrath jumped into an automobile driven by Russell Sneath, of 1733 East State street, Trenton, after forcing the owner out, and Seibert and Stoddard seized a car occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Lorenzo Fretz, of Lambertville, and drove toward Lawrenceville.

A short time later McGrath and Wierman crashed into and upset a gasoline pump at a service station at Oxford Valley. The prisoners abandoned the machine and Wierman dashed into a cornfield. McGrath attempted to hold up a man and woman driving from New York to Philadelphia, but the driver hurried down the highway to the Philadelphia city line, where he notified members of the motorcycle riot squad.

Joseph Campbell and H. B. Schaefer, members of the squad, rushed to Oxford Valley and together with members of a posse located the two convicts in a cornfield. McGrath and the two officers fought a duel in which the prisoner and Campbell fell mortally wounded. Both victims were taken to St. Francis Hospital, where they died a short time later. While the duel was on Wierman, a short distance away in the cornfield, committed suicide by blowing off the top of his head with a revolver bullet.

Two days after the escape the car stolen by Seibert and Stoddard was found abandoned on a lonely road off the Provincetown Road west of Princeton, where it is believed it had been since a short time after the get-away.

A score of State Troopers and prison guards searched that section but could find no trace of the men. Later reports were received two men resembling the convicts were seen in different localities in North Jersey.

The shooting resulted in the dismissal of Thomas S. Mitchell, a prison guard, on the charge of laxity. The guard has not yet had a hearing in the case.

SOLDIER'S KEEP LESS; CAR COSTS INCREASE

Army Pays More to Keep Auto Than It Does To Keep Man

FOOD PRICE DROPS

By Hobart C. Montee
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—It cost the United States Army less to keep a man and more to keep an automobile in 1931 than during 1930, according to the annual report of Major General John L. DeWitt, quartermaster general, released today.

The cost of food per man in the army decreased from 50.06 cents per day in 1930 to 41.15 cents per day in 1931. The cost of maintenance of the army's automobiles during the same period increased from $205.06 to $265.71 each, per year, or approximately nine cents less per day for feeding a soldier, and 17 cents more a day to keep a car in repair.

The decreased cost of rations was a reflection to the general reduction in the cost of living, while the increase in the maintenance of automobiles was laid to the aging condition of the cars owned by the army. Many of these were purchased during the World War, and are still in service.

Measures of economy and relief distributed in the Nicaraguan earthquake zone, and to unemployed in the United States, also were touched upon in General DeWitt's report. It stated that subsistence supplies were shipped from army depots at Panama, and other supplies were taken off army transport for relief of the earthquake sufferers and turned over to the American Red Cross in Nicaragua. In addition, meals were furnished to refugees returning to the United States on army transports.

During the year the Quartermaster Corps was called upon to render assistance to the unemployed in this country. Supplies were placed under the control of corps area commanders and with the approval of governors of various States there were loaned to reputable charitable organizations the following: 5,103 bed-sacks; 28,109 blankets; 1,300 pillow cases; 17,881 cots; 260 mattresses; 260 pillows; 400 bed sheets.

ARTHUR P. BRADY WILL RECITE HIS PRIZE "WHOPPER"

Bristol Man to Be Guest of Lowell Thomas in "Tall Story" Hour

OVER THE NBC HOOK-UP

Several Celebrities Are to Be Included in The Program

Tonight a well known Bristol resident, Arthur P. Brady, is to broadcast over the NBC hook-up, between 10 and 10.30 o'clock, according to an announcement today by Lowell Thomas, of the Literary Digest, New York City.

Mr. Brady is to read his famous "tall story" judged the best published in a recent book by Lowell Thomas. Other distinguished speakers at this, the second Tall Story Club banquet, will, in addition to Mr. Brady, include Capt. Frank Hawks, the flyer; Kermit Roosevelt, Gar Wood, Bruce Barton and others.

Lowell Thomas in his broadcasts asks his listeners to submit stories for the Tall Story Club. After these stories had been received it was decided to publish them in book form and the one submitted by Mr. Brady has been judged the best in the book. He was in receipt of an autographed copy of the book from Mr. Thomas.

The Brady "tall story" follows:

"MRS. TATWALL'S CLOTHESLINE"

Arthur P. Brady, who keeps a grocery store in Bristol, Pennsylvania, informs the Tall Story Club of a family, customers of his, who have in their happy household a remarkable snake. The reptile is of the Para (rubber) species—that is, it's one of the famous rubber snakes of South America. The rubber snake, as we all know, is exceedingly poisonous. And in its native haunts it is exceedingly dangerous, because the rubber in its constitution enables it to stretch for a considerable distance and thereby inflict its deadly bite without doing any traveling in the true sense of the word.

In any case, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Tatwall, of Bristol, have a large rubber snake which they have trained not to bite anybody except bill collectors and distant relatives who come for an indefinite visit. Mr. and Mrs. Tatwall have carried the education of that rubber snake to a remarkable degree. They employ the useful reptile as the family clothesline.

On every Monday morning, wash day, the rubber snake slithers to one of the washline poles in the backyard. He climbs the pole and then hooks his tail into the ring designated for the washline rope. Then the snake, still holding on with its tail, slides down the pole and across the yard, stretching itself. It climbs the other washline pole, some 40 yards away, and takes a good grip. The distance between the two poles is immaterial. The snake can stretch itself indefinitely, but Mr. and Mrs. Tatwall have placed the poles only 40 yards apart, because they don't believe in (Continued on Page 4)

Data Gathered by Sergeant Francis, and County Detective Russo Since Robbery at Chalfont Bank, and Attempted Hold-Up at Bank Here, Led to Clearing of Case

DOYLESTOWN, Nov. 17.—With the capture in New York City of a 24-year-old Camden, N. J., highwayman, who escaped from his cell in the Camden County Jail early on the morning of August 17 by sawing his way through two sets of steel bars and a steel plate, while his prison colleagues covered the screeching of the instrument by bellowing songs, the robbery of the Chalfont National Bank and the Farmers National Bank, of Bristol, has been solved, police say.

The Chalfont National Bank was robbed on March 13 by four youthful bandits and $2840 was stolen. The Bristol bank was held up on May 7, this year, but no money was stolen, the bandits being chased away amid pistol fire by bank employees and the sounding of the burglar alarm.

All four bank robbers are now in the hands of police. Three are serving time and the capture of Albert Rumford, in New York early last Saturday, police say, completes the investigation.

Information concerning three of the bandits has been in the hands of State Police of the Doylestown sub-station since September 1, but has been kept a secret until the capture of the fourth alleged member of the gang.

JOHN P. RUE DIES

John Paul Rue, brother of Henry W. Rue, of Edgely, died at his home in Johnstown yesterday. Funeral will occur tomorrow.

Information concerning the Chalfont and Bristol bank robberies was gathered by Sergeant William Francis, of Hershey, formerly in charge of the Doylestown sub-station of State Police, who with County Detective Antonio Russo and other police, worked on the investigation since the robberies.

From a Philadelphia youth detained last September at the Sixth District detective headquarters in that city, but who is now serving five to ten years in the penitentiary for robbery, Sergeant Francis two months ago secured a confession that solves the Chalfont and Bristol bank robberies.

The arrest of Wilbur Rae Creveling, 29, of 1110 West Glenwood avenue, Philadelphia, took place when Sergeant Francis took him into custody on a charge of bank robbery.

Creveling's confession also led police to the Eastern State Penitentiary two months ago, where Vernon Bates, 26, of Philadelphia, is serving a three to six-year sentence for robbery. Bates also admitted taking part in the Chalfont Bank robbery but not in the one at Bristol.

At the New Jersey State Prison in Trenton, Sergeant Francis and County Detective Russo, of Bristol, were informed by Thomas Patrick Cullinane, 19, of 1537 West Tucker street, Philadelphia, who is serving five to ten years for robbery, that he too took part in the Chalfont and Bristol jobs. Cullinane would not give the police a written statement, he said, because he banked on taking a chance on some of the witnesses dying before he completed his sentence in the Trenton State Prison.

The fourth member of the gang, known to police for some time, was captured in New York last Saturday. He is Albert Rumford, 24. Descriptions of Rumford were broadcast by police all over the United States, and a member of New York City's detective force saw Rumford on the street and recognized him.

The young highwayman, Rumford, was "trailed" by detectives of New York until they were sure of his identity and then arrested. He was surprised as he was entering his boarding house and offered no resistance. He had been living at the New York address since his escape from the Camden jail on August 17. He was in jail last August awaiting trial for hold-ups at the Old Mill Inn on the Burlington turnpike, and at a gasoline station at Twelfth and Admiral Wilson Boulevard, Camden.

Early on the morning of August 17, Rumford filed his way to freedom, using three hacksaws in the process. Although an investigation later was made, Camden authorities never were able to determine how he had procured the tools.

Statements made by the other three members of the bank-robbing gang, implicated Rumford in the Chalfont and Bristol jobs, and police believe that Rumford feared facing trial on the bank jobs and took a chance on escaping. He got away with it until Saturday's capture.

The signed confession received from Creveling, who police say has been connected with a criminal gang less than one year, clears up the investigation that took State Police of the Doylestown sub-station and County Detective Russo over 3000 miles on their investigations. Over 100 suspects were examined and over 300 automobile licenses were checked.

In the statement given to Sergeant Francis and Lieutenant Elwood Liebrandt, of the Sixth Philadelphia District last September, and made public for the first time today, Creveling said (Continued on Page 4)

WEATHER COWARDS

Dwellers in the temperate zone talk enthusiastically of the benefits of climatic variety. They are convinced that, compared with the people to the north and to the south of them, they live longer, get more out of life, accomplish more with less effort, have a higher civilization and are more progressive. And they give all the credit to the cycle of seasons.

They tell themselves this and they employ it effectively in their booster propaganda. Moreover, there is some foundation for the belief. But for every ten thousand adults that preach the doctrine of climatic temperance only one really practices it.

What happens with the first cold blast of winter? The adult population hibernates. Men and women who led outdoor lives from early spring until late fall imprison themselves in tightly closed buildings, except when riding abroad in automobiles just as tightly closed. Tired business men, who in warm weather are to be found on the golf links, are to be found in cold weather lounging with overstuffed stomachs in overstuffed chairs in stuffy offices, clubs and homes. As for adults of the other sex their cold weather hibernation is not less absolute.

Adult America can learn a valuable lesson from young America. Youth strikes boldly out into the snow and cold and returns glowing with good health and charged with new energy. Adults, fearful of chills and frost-bite, spend indoors all the health and energy accumulated in the preceding three seasons of healthful outdoor life. Those bigger than weather are bigger and better for it.

PEACE-CONSCIOUS

The "pax Romano" was a breed of war, and so were the European balance of power and every international alliance. Peace guaranteed by physical force has never been lasting. Thinking in terms of peace instead of in terms of war is the great need of the moment.

Men who think in terms of personal combat usually carry around bruised knuckles and blackened eyes. Nations that think in military terms find it difficult to keep out of war. History proves that wars invariably develop in quarters where the military is the center of the universe.

Physical disarmament has been so slow in coming because mankind has been slow in disarming morally. The world is not yet sure that it wants to abolish war entirely. The bloodshed and suffering must go, of course, but the glory and glamour and hysteria and emotion are hard for some to part with. Martial airs, the stamp of marching feet and boom of cannon are as necessary to the lives of the militaristic as vice to the uplifter, alcohol to the drunkard, and melodrama to the sentimental.

Only by disarming mentally and morally will the dawn of amity come. One way of effecting this disarmament is by reduction of naval armaments and armies. Big navies and armies engender big talk and big talk murders peace. World peace will come when the world ceases to be war-conscious and becomes peace-conscious.

Mothers Welcome New Plan For Better Control-of-Colds

Plan Introduced by Makers of Vicks VapoRub to Reduce the Family "Colds-Tax" is Made Possible by a New Preparation.

Local Drugists Offer a Test of the New Product and Plan to VapoRub Users on Unlimited Guarantee of Satisfactory Results.

Mothers are constantly faced with the problem of colds and their costs. It is the mothers, therefore, who especially appreciate the Vicks Plan for better "Control-of-Colds" in the home—just perfected by the makers of Vicks VapoRub.

The Vicks Plan is made possible by a new preparation, Vicks Nose & Throat Drops, based on a new idea in "preventing" colds. It is a companion product to VapoRub, the modern external method of "treating" colds. The two preparations aid and supplement each other. Together, as directed below, they give you the Vicks Plan for better "Control-of-Colds."

1.—Before a Cold Starts

Use Vicks Nose Drops—a few drops up each nostril—whenever you or your children have been exposed to anything which your own experience tells you is apt to bring on a cold—contact with others, having fresh colds, crowds, stuffy, ill-ventilated rooms, public places—a night on the Pullman or a dusty automobile ride—sudden changes in temperature, wet or cold—inhaling smoke, dust, gases—or when you are tired from overwork.

In short, don't wait for that stuffy, sneezy irritation of the nasal passages—Nature's warning that you are actually "catching cold."

2.—After a Cold Starts

At night, massage the throat at chest well with Vicks VapoRub now available in "stainless form," you prefer. Spread on thick and cover with warm flannel. Leave the clothing loose around the neck, that the medicated vapors, arising may be inhaled freely all night long. During the day, use Vicks Nose Drops every few hours—any time, any place. This gives you full 24-hour treatment.

Ideal for Children

Both these Vicks products are external and hence can be used as free and as often as needed without risk of too much "dosing." Internally, "dosing" so often disturbs the digestion—especially the delicate digestions of children. This impairs the appetite, which, in turn, reduces the strength at a time when resistance disease is most needed. Don't "dose" children—especially children's colds—except on advice of your family physician.

Trial Offer to Vicks Users

Proof of this Plan is in its trial in your own home. Get a bottle of Vicks Drops today. Keep it along with your trusted Vicks VapoRub. Use them together as directed. Their better "Control-of-Colds" will be not in fewer colds—colds of less severity and shorter duration. An actual saving to you in money, loss of time a health. Otherwise, the test will cost you nothing. For, unless results more than satisfactory, your drug will refund in full the price of the new Vicks Nose Drops.

READ THIS FIRST

Frank Severn has been kidnapped from his country home, Beggar's Court, apparently by persons trying to steal the fabulous and sinister CZarina Rubies. Severn's friend, Jim Wynter, enlists the help of Bill Grayson, a lawyer, and they search the grounds, discovering a secret stairway and a locked door in the ruins of an ancient chapel. While they plan to force the door a wall collapses, burying it under tons of masonry. They suspect Martin, a servant of Severn's, of dynamiting the wall.

In a village nearby they meet an ex-convict, Ilsham, who goes on crutches. They also encounter a mysterious Dr. Martell.

Grayson's wife and Katharine Farling, to whom the rubies rightfully belong by inheritance from her Russian grandfather, return to London while the two men plan to search Beggar's Court again at night. Wynter discovers Ilsham, his crutches laid aside, examining a motor boat in a boathouse. Martin and a thug named Frome try to shoot Wynter, who outwits and captures them. In the library Wynter finds an unsigned letter addressed to himself, which some one has opened and hidden away. It warns him that Sant, Severn's lawyer, is untrustworthy. He decides that Sant is one of the kidnapers. Katharine tells Wynter that the loss of friends, following the ruin of her musical career, embittered her.

NOW GO ON

CHAPTER XLIV

"But I don't know why I'm talking so much about myself," she said with a quick self-impatience.

"But of course I like you to, Katharine," Jim told her—"don't you know that?"

GRATITUDE

There was a moment's silence. Her face was half averted, her eyes staring out across the dim garden. Then, her voice not quite under control:

"I think it came over me suddenly with a rush . . . all this amazing kindness heaped upon me—you—the Graysons—all you've done," she whispered with a little catch in her voice. "Oh, I haven't words to tell what it has meant to me, the debt I feel. And all that growing sense of bitterness I spoke of has gone—"

Her mouth was tremulous. The faltering words trailed off abruptly into silence.

"But what nonsense, my dear!" said Jim, touching her hand in the darkness.

For a moment a sudden, almost irresistible impulse swept him to take her in his arms, tell her how much she had come to mean to him, that above everything in the world he wanted her—her to be his always. How long was it he had really known her? Three or four days? He felt as if he had known and loved her all his life.

"And you mustn't speak of debts between you and me, Katharine, when you know—"

And just then Mike dashed out barking through the open gate. And those impulsive words that had been on his lips remained unspoken.

In the darkness of the road a figure was passing—the object of the terrier's sudden excitement, which was no more than a friendly greeting to some one he knew. The car lamps threw up the features of the man who had stepped to pat Mike—a bullet-headed, stocky figure, who from an indefinable something about him might have been an ex-sailor or an ex-bruiser, and who had as a matter of actual fact been both in his time.

To Jim, the face with its good-humored ugliness, that in some odd way was definitely attractive when he smiled, seemed vaguely familiar. But it was Katharine who recognized this passerby at once.

"Why, Webber," she said smilingly to him, "how pleased Mike seems to see you again. I expect he remembers what you did for him yesterday."

Webber was John Ilsham's servant, who had helped in the ministrations to Mike after the unhappy episode of the yellow dog, and had rifled the larder of a lamb chop for his benefit. Webber saluted with evident pleasure at Katharine's recognition.

"Oh, well, miss, I always seem to get on well with dogs—maybe they know I like them, and that's why. He's a rare, fine little chap, this, and no mistake. And intelligent, too. You can see that with 'all an eye."

"But how conceited you'll make Mike!" laughed Katharine.

The headlamps of a car had appeared up the road, coming swiftly from the direction of London, to slow down as it drew near. Webber saluted again and went on his way as the car stopped, and Bill Grayson and his chauffeur got out.

"That you, Bill? Why, we didn't expect you for a couple of hours yet."

"Didn't expect it myself," responded Bill, as the three walked up to the house. "Hello, Milly," as Mrs. Bill met them at the door. "Felt I mustn't keep late hours the first night in our new quarters!"

He slipped out of his coat.

"First of all I'll just run up for a wash. By the way, Milly, I suppose we have a bathroom here? I have to ask, because you were in such a hurry to take this house that I signed the agreement before I had a chance of exploring the upstairs regions! Jim, you better come up and show me the way to my own bathroom!"

Upstairs Bill said abruptly:

"You've asked Katharine about that supposed letter from Severn?"

"Yes. I showed it to her without any hint at all—but the first thing that struck her was that it didn't seem like Frank's writing," Jim said.

"We compared it with Frank's letter from Vienna. A forgery, as that anonymous writer said—I'll swear to that."

"Just a forgery, eh, to get you down to Beggar's Court that night—though goodness knows what their reason could be!" commented Bill.

Jim had a swift mental picture of Sant, who had met him on the road that night as if by merest chance not far from Beggar's Court—Sant, professing a punctured tire, but really waiting to waylay the man he had known that forged letter would bring. Sant, who had played so consummately his part of startled astonishment, to safeguard himself from any suspicion in that plot stage-managed at Beggar's Court in readiness for their coming.

MORE NEWS

"Well, I have a bit of news for you, Jim—no, not about Inspector Haste. I rang up Scotland Yard, but Haste can't see me till tomorrow. That flood of forged English notes on the Continent's keeping him pretty busy," Bill Grayson said.

"Another letter from our anonymous friend, that's what. At least I suspect it is from the address. I found it waiting in Garden Road; must have come after you left."

Jim looked at the envelope that his friend had brought. It was addressed to him in the same hand, writing as yesterday's letter, that might have been written by a woman. It had been posted that morning in London.

But the enclosed letter, as he tore it open, gave no hint of the writer's identity. Anonymous as before. Just a voice from the dark.

The letter was typewritten and brief:

"Naturally Sant took measures to prevent your entering that underground door in the ruins. Behind that locked door you might have found the explanation why his enemies decided that Severn knew too much for their safety, was too dangerous to be allowed to remain free."

The two men exchanged a startled glance. Their unknown correspondent had been right about that forged letter from Frank Severn—was this veiled hint as to the motive behind the conspiracy against Severn true also? If so, as they had already felt pretty sure, the matter of those CZarina Rubies hidden at Monksilver had only come into the plot as an afterthought, had not been responsible for the attack on Severn in the first place.

Only, what was the writer's motive? To tell so much—and yet at the same time so little! That was as bewildering as was his—or her—identity.

"Severn knows too much for their safety . . ."

Was there some ugly secret at Beggar's Court, implicating Sant and Martell, on which Frank Severn had stumbled unexpectedly to make him suddenly dangerous to these men?

But what secret?

Jim Wynter awoke the next morning from a particularly exciting dream in which he had chased a monstrous fish of no known species holding a key in its gaping jaws, through the empty echoing spaces of Monksilver.

He was quite sure that the house was Monksilver because in all the rooms the panelling had been splintered or torn away from the walls—and since one loses one's sense of humor in dreams, the phenomenon had not seemed at all surprising or out of the ordinary. He merely knew that in some vague way it was tremendously important that he should secure that key.

It had been Frank Severn's letter to Katharine, of course, which he had seen yesterday for the first time, that had inspired the dream. In that five-weeks-old letter a whimsical pen and ink sketch had followed the signature almost like a postscript. From a schoolboy Severn had always had a gift for knocking off inimitable thumb-nail drawings full of grotesque humor.

The sketch in question was evidently meant to represent a fish of sorts. A fish holding in its mouth a key of exaggerated size.

The text of the letter contained no reference whatever to the drawing, which doubtless was an impromptu afterthought. But beneath it Severn had written:

"I'll give you a dozen guesses as to what this means."

PUZZLE

"But a dozen guesses wouldn't be nearly enough! I expect, though, it was just a joke of Frank's to mystify me," Katharine had said. "Or, if not—well, I haven't the faintest idea what it can be supposed to mean."

Nor had Jim. But for the words written underneath, he would have thought the sketch had no particular meaning at all.

Perhaps it was because Severn's letter was chiefly concerned with those rubies hidden somewhere at Monksilver that, in his dream, Jim had associated the fish and the key with the house where that splintered panelling showed evidence of a determined search for the Murinov treasure.

With that impression vivid in his mind, a thou it made Jim Wynter say to himself suddenly:

"I wonder if there can be some connection between that sketch and those hidden jewels—and if that key in the fish's mouth was meant for the key to their hiding place?"

A veiled but definite clue to that cache of treasure, now become the storm center of bewilderingly strange mystery. For a minute or two Jim let his mind play round some such possibility. It was conceivable enough that Severn might have sent a hidden, but actual clue by way of a joke to tax Katharine's ingenuity before seeing her—as at the time of writing he had expected to do with in twenty-four hours of his letter reaching her.

taking undue advantage of anybody's good nature, not even the snake's.

When the rubber snake has turned itself into a clothesline, Mrs. Tatwall carries the family wash out into the yard, and with plenty of clothespins, proceeds to hang onto the snake, sheets, pillow cases, shirts, socks, pajamas, dresses, and the family underwear. The articles of raiment remain on the serpentine washline until dry, when upon taking down the wash, Mrs. Tatwall whistles and the rubber snake comes down and returns to his usual resting place around the rubber plant in the Tatwalls' parlor. The contact with the rubber plant freshens the elasticity of the rubber in the snake's body.

On one occasion there came a poor drying day. It was damp and misty. The clothes were hanging on the clothesline snake in the backyard but were taking a long time to dry. Just then Mr. and Mrs. Tatwall turned on the family radio and a jazz piece of music blared out. In fact, the Tatwalls were in a jazz mood that day, and they kept the saxophones shrieking from the radio for several hours.

The rubber snake has also an ear for music, and upon hearing the titillating strains of jazz was impelled to dance. The faithful reptile, however, did not desert his post as the family washline. Stretched out as he was, from one post to the other, his dancing efforts were confined to an undulating wriggle, something on the order of the old-fashioned hootchy-kootchy. They say it was an amazing sight to see that snake, with all the family wash pinned to him, writhing and swaying to the lil of music, while the family wash, especially the underclothing, did a remarkable series of minnets, jigs, and hula-hula dances.

The useful part of it was that the complicated shaking dried the clothes, and Mrs. Tatwall's wash was dry several hours sooner than her neighbors.

CROYDON

A card and bingo party will be given Saturday night, November 28th, at the Croydon fire house, Patterson avenue, by the committee in charge of the "Benevolent Order of Pilgrims," which will be instituted in Croydon. All white persons are eligible, from 16 to 50 years. The order is non-sectarian. All those desiring membership consult the committee members, who will be glad to answer all questions.

The Cornwells Branch, Needlework Guild meeting held at the Eddington Presbyterian Church house, Saturday afternoon, was addressed by a "Salvation Lass," from Philadelphia. About 1700 garments were displayed by the organization. It was a very social afternoon.

The masked party given by the Croydon Red Ladies Saturday night, was a very merry affair. Prizes were awarded the best dressed and the funniest. The orchestra played a few selections and music delighted the dancers.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Sells, of Wyoming avenue, entertained relatives from Philadelphia on Sunday.

Dr. and Mrs. Gonzales, of Cedar avenue, are entertaining Mrs. Gonzalez's grandfather from Pittsburgh.

On Saturday evening Mr. and Mrs. Batholoma entertained friends from Philadelphia.

Mrs. James Kennedy, of State Road, is recuperating nicely from injuries received in an auto accident.

Bulldog vs. Cantab

By HARDIN BURNLEY

THAT most ivy-clad tower on the American football scene—the annual Yale-Harvard game—will draw its usual jubilee throng to Cambridge, Mass., Saturday. This rivalry dates back to 1875, when, under modified Rugby rules, the Cantabrigians beat the Bulldogs, 4-0. Down through the years of the "Big Four" and, later, the "Big Three," Harvard and Yale have carried on, contributing perhaps more glamorous lore to the game than any other of its old institutions, save only Princeton. Of course, the sport has grown so great in the past two decades that many other universities have surpassed Old Eli and John Harvard with more formidable teams, but "the awful hoar of innumerable centuries" (as it seems) lends vast prestige to the annual game between Blue and Crimson—so much so that it is always a tremendous feature wherever football is known. Early this season Harvard boomed up as a sure winner of its climax game, but since then Yale has improved greatly though the Crimson—with a veteran and experienced team—is still a decidedly favorite. Last year Harvard won, 13-0. It should repeat by at least two touchdowns unless Old Eli reaches miraculous heights on next Saturday afternoon. One of the grid's most glittering stars in success or failure—Capt. Albie Booth—will face Harvard tacklers for the last time. From his freshman year on the Cantabs have kept "Little Boy Blue" in bounds; he's never once been shaken loose through their alert defenses. He and Barry Wood were touted as quarterback rivals from the start. They were both frosh and are now varsity captains. Albie is at half now, while Barry is rated generally as the best quarterback in the East at least. Parker and Lassiter have outshown Fall, with the exception of Albie's extraordinary playing in the Dartmouth 33-33 tie, and, if in form today, they should compare most favorably with Crickard, Mays and White, who flash with Wood among the Cantabs' comets. Saturday's classic marks the end of Eddie Casey's first season as head coach. It will be a glorious one if the Cantabs can keep Booth bottled up once more.

Farmers Bank Hold-Up Solved; Capture 4th Man

that four of them, including Batten, Culliney and the landit who at that time was missing (now believed to be Rumford), met in Philadelphia. They drove to Chalfont in a stolen high-powered Auburn sedan. The car was stolen a month previously from Jacob Labe, Jr., of Elkins Park, while it was parked in a North Philadelphia parking grounds. The owner of the car was driven to Andalusia, Bucks county, and dumped out.

At Chalfont, during the noon hour of March 13, this year, the four bandits robbed the place, Culliney told police that he was the one who jumped over the interior bank cage with another of the quartet and helped to scoop up the money and place it in the gang had brought with them.

"We then beat it for Philadelphia down the Limekiln pike," Culliney told Sergeant Francis. "As we were leaving Chalfont one of the gang looked back and saw a fellow with a red shirt riding a motorcycle.

"Thinking it was a cop and that we were being followed, the guy next to me broke out the rear window of the car and pointed a high-powered rifle out the back. He was about to pull the trigger to bump the guy off when I pulled it away from him and told him the fellow was not a policeman. "We drove to Philadelphia and at one time were riding 100 miles an hour. We had to stop once for a funeral but the police never caught up to us. We got into the city and drove up alleys, finally landing at a garage. We put the car inside and divided the money on the running board of the car.

"I got $530. The garage was on Castor street in Philadelphia." The Bristol robbery was on May 7, 1931, when Creveling, Culliney and the then missing bandit drove to Bristol in the morning in the same Auburn sedan they used on the Chalfont job. A hired car was hidden in a woods near Cornwells Heights and the bandits proceeded to Bristol in the Auburn car, Creveling told police.

"We waited about fifteen minutes in Bristol until the coast was clear and then went to the bank," Creveling wrote in his confession. "I met a woman coming out of the bank as I was going in. She knew there was a robbery on because she heard one of the gang tell them to 'stick 'em up.' I pulled her inside the bank with me. "Then I heard somebody say something about sounding the alarm and one of the gang said, 'If you do, I'll blow your brains out.' About that time the alarm went off and we beat it out the front door. As I was leaving I just missed being hit by a bullet fired by one of the bank fellows.

"We got into the car, beat it, lost a car that followed us, and drove to Cornwells Heights where we abandoned the Auburn and jumped in the hired car and continued to Philadelphia. No money was stolen at the Bristol bank."

On June 5, Creveling, Culliney and the then missing bandit were arrested for robbery in New Jersey. Creveling was released under $1500 bail and was arrested in Philadelphia on another charge while out on bail. Culliney pleaded guilty and was sentenced to the Trenton State Prison. Batten was arrested in Philadelphia and sentenced.

Following the arrest of Creveling, the investigation led Sergeant Francis and others, including Troopers Toy and Grebunas, to the vicinity of Broad and Lehigh, Philadelphia, where numerous suspects from that section were questioned. Creveling was finally questioned and after police had shown him a cap found near the abandoned Auburn car used in the Bristol and Chalfont bank jobs, Creveling admitted that the cap belonged to him. He refused at first to state any of the details concerning the robberies but finally gave the officers a long and signed statement.

What action the Bucks county authorities will take against the four bandits will be decided in the near future.

Automobile Accidents in 1930!

Don't Neglect Your Brakes!

Brakes that are only a "little bit" out of adjustment can cause accidents as easily as those that are actually defective.

A front wheel brake that pulls a little to right or left when you stop may suddenly swerve you into a parallel line of traffic. Rear brakes that drag or grab only slightly may start a skid that can end disastrously.

There is only one way to know your brakes are safe—to know that they will not involve you or your family in an accident. And that way is to have your brakes inspected regularly.

We can give you the skilled inspection and adjustment that is necessary—and we can take care of you quickly and at moderate cost. If your brakes need relining we will install American Brakeblok—the new-type brake lining that stops cars quicker—and stays in adjustment longer.

Have your brakes inspected. Don't wait until it is too late.
